San Diego Fly Fishers regretfully announce the passing of long time member

John Beckstrand

Sad news to the San Diego Fly Fishing Community. Our old Wednesday Bunch friend, John Beckstrand passed away on March 18th, 2015. His wife, Loretta, did not have a memorial service at John's wishes. His ashes have been interred at the military memorial wall at Miramar.

Take a moment to remember good times fishing on local lakes and in the Sierras with our friend John. The SDFF fly tying group is benefiting from the fly tying materials he donated a few years ago.

His legacy lives on. RIP

Quote of the Month

"Those are my principles, and if you don't like them...well, I have others."

Groucho Marx

San Diego Fly Fishers or Minutemen? April saw how quickly this organization can respond and provide support when there is a dire need in the community and there is little advance notice. Paul Woolery was approached by the San Diego Park and Recreation department for assistance to help set a fishing derby for kids at Chollas Lake. The event was only a few days away and Park and Rec. was overwhelmed. SDFF to the rescue! Paul sent out a request for help from club members and friends and SDFF responded by providing the help to make this event a huge success and all for the benefit of the kids of San Diego.

Chollas Lake has become the focus of community debate that can be found on page 8. My opinion is this is a community jewel that provides a safe alternative activity for the children of San Diego and needs to be protected. I can recall my early youth so many years ago and how fishing played a key role in shaping my adult personality (I know, that would explain a lot of things).

Conservation Chair Garry Strawn and members of San Diego Fly Fishers were rewarded a certificate of appreciation from the US Department of Agriculture for our continuing support of Golden Trout found at Casa Viejas Meadows. When you see Gary be sure to give him anatta boy for a job well done. Also mark your calendar for the semi-annual trip to the meadows to raise the cattle exclusion fence taking place on June 12-15. We have an opportunity to go fishing at Tidelands on June 6th for conservation and entitled Fishing for Science Derby. See the flyer found on page 5 for more details and join me for a worthwhile event.

A shout out to Don Davis our representative to the Southwest Council of the International Federation of Fly Fishers (SWC-IFFF) who was recently named the Volunteer Coordinator for the council's Fly Fishing Faire to be held at the Tri-County Fairgrounds in Bishop in October (see ad on page 9). Great job Don.

It's that time of the year, Christmas in June when we hold our annual fundraising raffle and silent auction on June 1st at the Southwestern Yacht Club. There is an article about a new educational effort we will help fund called Trout in the Classroom at the new Discovery Center of the San Diego River Park Foundation. The article can be found on page 4.

This brings me to the two MVP's of this raffle Bruce Michael and Bruce Bechard whose combined efforts promises an exciting and some unique twists to this event. Some of the prizes are listed on page ___. The Bruces have some surprises in store and I hope they are gifted wrapped. All we need now is a decorated tree and a jolly fat man. All kidding aside, they have both worked their tails off and we can show our appreciation by buying more raffle tickets and packing the raffle/auction room with club members and friends.

This club runs off of your generosity, your volunteering efforts, your commitment to Cleaner Waters, Brighter Streams, Better Fishing and I am humbled by all of you.

Thank You.

Trout in the Classroom a new area educational support

Trout in the Classroom

History

Trout in the Classroom (TIC) programs have been in place all across the country for more than 20 years, the results of numerous collaborations between teachers, volunteers, government agencies, and local organizations including (but not limited to) Trout Unlimited. The programs were designed specifically for teachers who wanted to incorporate more environmental education into their curriculum.

TIC in New York: In 1997, TIC was started in New York through the efforts of the late Joan Stoliar, volunteers from Trout Unlimited (TU) and the Theodore Gordon Flyfishers in 1997. Participating students from K-12 learn the importance of water quality and connect with their watershed by raising trout from eggs to fingerlings and then releasing them in a clean, cold stream in the spring. Since its inception, TIC in NY has grown from four classrooms to more than 200. This rapid growth is a testament to the program's adaptability, effectiveness, and ability to interest students of all ages and backgrounds.

In 2004, Trout Unlimited hired a full-time TIC Coordinator based in New York City. This Coordinator oversees New York's statewide program and provides the support that teachers need to plan and implement Trout in the Classroom. The Coordinator supplies some resource materials, organizes teacher conferences in the fall and spring, supports communication within the network of almost 200 teachers, and visits classrooms to lead educational activities. TIC teachers rely on the Coordinator and program material--such as the newsletter, website, and everyday correspondence via phone and e-mail--to maintain their trout tanks and enrich their classroom programs

About this Program

Trout in the Classroom (TIC) is an environmental education program in which students in grades k-12 . . .

Most programs end the year by releasing their trout in a state-approved stream near the school or within a nearby watershed.

During the year each teacher tailors the program to fit his or her curricular needs. Therefore, each program is unique. TIC has interdisciplinary applications in science, social studies, mathematics, language arts, fine arts, and physical education.

Trout in the Classroom is a conservation-oriented environmental education program for elementary, middle, and high school students. Through the school year, students raise trout from eggs to fry and then release them into approved cold water streams and lakes. This act of raising, monitoring, and caring for young trout fosters a conservation ethic within participating students and promotes an understanding of their shared water resources.

Fly of the Month

Federation of Fly Fishers Fly of the Month March 2010

SHOP VAC By Bob Bates

This is a go to fly for many anglers. It is a generic pattern representing many different insects. With its white wing and brass bead it has been called a great searching pattern. Roger Thompson, Inkom, ID tied this one at the 2009 East Idaho Fly Tying Expo in Idaho Falls, ID. It was developed years ago by Craig Mathews and company at Blue Ribbon Flies in West Yellowstone, MT

It can be used in streams or lakes. One reference said that it most effective in tail waters, but it is excellent in freestone waters. Any type of fly line can be used depending how deep you want to fish it. Some anglers use it as a dropper from a high floating pattern like a stonefly, hopper or may fly. When fishing it deep in a stream, adjust the length of the leader to be twice the estimated depth of the water. Then cast upstream so it will sink as it comes back to you. Watch end of the fly line to detect a strike. If you are using a floating pattern as a strike indicator be sure to watch it carefully. If the floating pattern does anything strange like stop, move upstream or sideways, tighten your line. It might be a rock or a nice brown trout. I usually don't STRIKE because that is when the tippet breaks. I just tighten the line, and if it wiggles it is probably a fish.

- In lakes you can use a floating line or any of the sinking lines to put the fly in the proper place. Let the fly sink to where you think the fish are, and then retrieve the fly in a manner to attract the fish. Books have been written on the subject.

Materials

Hook: DaiRiki 135, 14

Bead: Brass 3/32 Gold

Thread: Uni-thread, 8/0 white

Rib: Copper wire, small

Body: Pheasant tail

Wing: Darlon, Zelon or Sparkle yarn, white

- Wind thread forward to just behind the bead, and then wrap pheasant tail fibers forward to bead, secure and trim excess.
- Spiral the copper wire forward and secure. Wiggle the wire to break it off. Sometimes when the wire is cut, a sharp edge is left that cuts the thread. Also Roger is reluctant to use his good scissors for cutting wire.
- Select a small bundle of Darlon, and attach it as a wing behind the bead. Trim at back of the body. (Other tiers make shorter wings.)
- Whip finish, trim thread and coat thread winds with a little head cement.

Closing comments: As with any great fly there are a few variations. One tier used chartreuse wire. Another added two winds of lead free wire and shoved it into the back of the bead. Two others added a peacock herl thorax (under the wing and in front of the wing). They all sing the praises of the Shop Vac as a great fish catcher. It is easy to tie, so tie a few and go fishing.

Tying steps:

- Attach thread behind bead.
- Hold copper wire on top of hook, and wind thread over it to past the barb.
- Attach 6 or 8 pheasant tail fibers on top of hook.

Chollas Lake in the Crosshairs ? A casualty of the current drought.

Drinking Water Use for Fishing Spot Defended by Morgan Cook on May 14th generated the following quote “While turning off the water to Chollas Lake would seem to be a simple way to respond to the drought, the irreparable damage that would be done to the ecosystem surrounding the lake, in addition to the loss of an important public space, balances the equation,” parks and recreation spokesman Tim Graham told the U-T after its original story. He continued by stating “The city understands and appreciates the renewed interest in the lake’s water consumption,” Graham said. “The city will consider that interest as it reviews a wide range of options.”

The story has been all over the local news media in recent days. An on-line edition of the San Diego UT dated May 6th and written by Morgan Cook said that in 2008 “the city was pumping about 53 million gallons of water into the lake annually, at a cost of at least $140,000. That’s enough to supply about 421 typical households for a year, or 501 households assuming they all cut 16 percent in line with the state mandate”. This U-T Watchdog column was questioning the continuation of water delivery to a lake whose function is strictly recreational. The bottom line of this investigation is why this lake should continue to receive water when the rest of us have to cut back.

Darlene Luckins wrote in the San Diego Nature Examiner that Chollas Lake is a small lake in the middle of the city of San Diego. It actually has a long history that begins in 1901 when the reservoir was created. It was used to supply water to the city until 1966 when it was turned into a park and later a youth fishing lake. It is no longer supplying water to the city, but it is a popular place to visit for people who live in a very urban area. “Southeastern San Diego residents have been protective of their lake. There was a public outcry in 2007, after people started hearing rumors that the city might stop filling the lake because of costs to the water department. The park department took over the costs.” UT May 6, 2015.

A follow-up U-T Watchdog article entitled

The article mentions an unofficial on-line poll with 2000 respondents voting 86% opposed to using drinking water to fill the lake. Also mentioned that recycled water was not available. This article then tries to tie the city’s handling of Lake Morena to its handling of Chollas Lake “That the city is now using Chollas Lake’s ecosystem to defend its decision to maintain the fishing lake with drinking water is frustrating to county residents who have watched large numbers of Lake Morena’s fish die in the past. “I don’t doubt that the city puts a high value on outdoor recreation,” Jacob said in a statement Wednesday. “I just wish city water officials had displayed the same value at Lake Morena.”

It is apparent to me that this writer has Chollas Lake in their crosshairs and is generating articles that seek to end the existence of this recreational lake. The value to the community cannot be measured simply in million of gallons of water. What would this area look like without the lake. A dry dusty lake bottom capable of generating unhealthy dust storms that could jeopardize local residents, eucalyptus trees dying for lack of water creating an unpleasant environment to the many walkers around this lake (and judging their numbers the most popular activity at this park), and an opportunity lost to the youths of San Diego having an outdoor activity that is a great alternative to gang activity.

San Diego Fly Fishers has made the commitment to supporting youth activities in both time and money and we stand firmly behind the Cities determination to maintaining Chollas Lake.

SAN DIEGO FLY FISHERS

Dear PAUL WOOLERY,

Day at the Docks 2015, our 36th annual event was again blessed with a typical San Diego Spring Day. Even with all the road construction going on around us and the lack of exhibitor parking, we were able to get all our exhibitors in and out without too many difficulties. A special thanks to those of you who did early Saturday set ups. You have to admit, it makes Sunday morning a so much easier.

If you checked our social media pages, Day at the Docks reached an all-time high with pictures and positive comments. Be on the lookout for more postings on the Sportfishing.org site and on our social media pages.

We sincerely hope that all of you enjoyed yourselves and experienced positive returns on your investment as a Day at the Docks exhibitor. We are always open to your suggestions, comments and ideas to make our event even better.

A special thanks goes out to our new sponsoring exhibitor Lucas Oil who brought their fantastic racing machine. If you didn't get an opportunity to see this boat you missed something really special. Also new this year was our Fishing Simulator sponsored by Costa Sunglasses. Other event sponsors were Seeker Rods, sponsor of the Long Range Stage, the casting contest sponsors Seeker Rods and Avet Reels, and our Main Stage sponsor Costa Del Mar.

The Red, White and Blue raffles for the San Diego Burn Institute received a huge response especially with prizes that include 3 pairs of Costa Sunglasses, fishing reels from Accurate, Okuma, Avet, and Penn. Two Shimano reels were donated one by Fisherman's Landing Tackle and the other by the Southern California Deaf Fisherman. These raffles are successful only because of the huge response in donations from local business and our exhibitors.

We just got back the video footage that was shot at this year's Day at the Docks by Kevin Brannon. A few of our Exhibiting Sponsors, enjoyed added exposure through the video which we will be displaying on our own website www.sportfishing.org until next year's 2016 edition. Take a look at it through this link: <https://youtu.be/UPvMI-XITXw>. If you'd like to be included in future productions, ask us about becoming an Exhibitor Sponsor in 2016.

Again, we thank you all for another successful Day at the Docks. It is our goal to provide you the very best return for your participation. We hope to see you all next year when we celebrate our 37th Day at the Docks. Always on Sunday, the 3rd weekend in April...
